What does TIR mean? What are the main purposes of the TIR system?

Instructions

Click the question mark to answer the question.

The TIR System also offers numerous benefits for all the players in the supply chain: transport operators, customs administrations, and international trade in general. Let's study them by connecting each player to the applicable set of benefits.

Customs

The TIR system

- Enables goods to travel internationally with a minimum of interference and delays by customs administrations.
- Allows exporters and importers to select more easily the form of transport most suitable for their needs by reducing the impediments to international traffic by road caused by customs controls.
- Allows the use of simplified documentation.
- Gives access to more than 55 countries.
- Avoids the need to deposit a guarantee covering the duties and taxes at transit borders.
- Allows small and medium-sized transport operators to access global markets competitively whilst retaining their independence.

Transport Operators

The TIR system

- Encourages the development of international trade in a secure and controlled environment by easing traditional impediments to the international movement of goods.
- Enables significant economies to be made in transport costs by reducing delays in transit.
- Facilitates international exchanges.

International Trade

The TIR System Instructions

Link each player to the relevant benefits of the TIR System by drawing a line with your mouse.

his administrations (the transit document, the TIR Carnet).

In order for goods to transit a country, Customs authorities need a control procedure to ensure that goods that enter the country also leave the country and they also need a means of ensuring collection of duties and taxes that become due if the goods do not leave the country. Without a transit system there can be export/import procedures that must be undertaken at each border crossing.

On entry into the transit country:

The transporter of the goods is required to deposit an amount equivalent to the duties and taxes that may become due, (i.e. the duties and taxes that would be payable if the goods were to be placed in free circulation);
 In other words, Customs examine the goods and then hold, for the duration of the transit, a cash deposit or security given by a guarantor to cover the duties and taxes that may become payable.
